

I styled the elements from the lo-fi prototype to give a better visual hierarchy and consistency with other pages of the website, such as using different colors and borders. The images also have rounded corners. Also, I put two columns so that more items can be populated in a more compact way, as opposed to the users having to scroll vertically twice as more, which is what I had for the lo-fi prototype.